SUITED FOR A MONUMENT. The Ranb Lot Should Be Used for

This Purpose. (For the Dispatch.)
Inquiry among the property owners and business-men in the vicinity of the triangular lot on the north side of Broad street between Brook avenue and Adams decided objection to its use as the site of a new engine-house, whilst its use for a monument would be highly gratifying.

A petition against its use as the site of F Company Association, which has petitioned the Council for the grant of the lot as the site for a monument to its dead, has a strong claim upon the regard of the city, as will appear from its memorial to the Council.

Its record is a noble one, and is scarce surpassed by any other hand which battied for southern rights. The memorial to the Council saves: "F Company Association would plead that its now universally feeble frate-nity represents a band, which, as a military organization, and severally as citizens, has ever been an essential element in the moral and material went of the city, and as a staunch bulwark in viclositude and danger. Organized in 1856, it was among the first of the military bodies which was ordered to Harper's Ferry when fanaticism menaced our all, and it there remained until quiet was resored.

F Company, composed of the flowers of our city's manhood, was organized October 19, 1859, with R Milton Cary as capitaln. Its record during our monantous struggle of 1861-65, was among the notices of southern exemplification.

object of southern exemplification. It participated in fifty-eight battles and rengarements with the enemy, and of its 140 members, rank and file, by crig call collistment and later accessions, fitty-seven were promoted to commissions from that of subal ern to general, in the several armies of the service thirty were killed or died from disease contracted in the service; nine were datharded from the Lost Cause; thirty-seven wounded, and twenty-one languished in Federal prisons.

It may be added also that the company was a mong the first to be entailed.

any was among the first to be enrolled in the service of the Confederacy, and that it was importantly instrumental in promoting the efficiency of our crude forces, by service as drill masters and further, that its complete roll comprehends fifty-one additional names of those who were members of the company hends fif'y-one additional names of those who were members of the commany prior to the commencement of hostilities in 1851, and of them thirty served as commissioned officers in the Confederate States army, and thus, of a total of 2t, eighty-seven became officers."

This record is an enviable one, and nosterity may cherish with pardonable pride, a monument to ancestry so honoring.

Verdi at Home.

(Blackwood's Maguzine.) Verdi's daily life is as simple as it could be. He rises at a o'clock, and sips a cup of black coffee, then he makes his way be He rises at a o'clock, and sips a cup of black coffee, then he makes his way into the garden, to look to his flowers—his own special hobby, and work. In which, after music, he takes most interest. The next scene is the farm, verdi is strong on farming, and superintends that d partment with as much zest as it has were forced to work it at a profit. His implements and tools are of the best make, nearly all of them coming from England. He is passionately fond of horses, and a Newmarket trainer could not be more particular respecting the man and condition of his equine possessions, or the scate of their stables and surroundings. His stud is known as the Razza Verdi, and its owner visits it almost daily.

At 8 o'clock the composer partakes of a light breakfast of coffee and milk, and at 10:30 dejeuner. Then he reverts to his gardening occupation, and becomes so intent upon his work that he dislikes the prospect of being disturbed by eventhat generally-welcome guest, the postman. Verdi hates a heavy correspondence, and, aithough he submits to the inevitable demands of his position, he does all he can to discourage letter-writing. Withat, the 2 o'clock messenger invariably brings the maestro a heavy budget of correspondence. He dines at 5 o'clock in summer, and at 5 in the winter, generally taking a drive either before or after this meat. Then Verdi likes a gime of cards or billiards before he retires for the night, which is invariably at 10 o'clock. His reading is mainly poetry and a little philosophy.

(Kenny's "Endowed Charities.") An instance of a very comprehensive and yet very futile foundation is affordand yet very futile foundation is afforded by that of Mr. Henry Smith, who in 1628 left large sums for four objects. Part was to go in redeeming captives from pirates; but since 1723 no captive has been found on whom it could be spent. Part, now producing £5,225 a year, was to go in doice, and is distributed, with the usual results, among 309 districts. In one of wnich it is given to one household out of every two, in another to two households out of every three, and in another—according to the vicar—a charity was never worse applied; its effects are demosalizing. Part, again, was reserved for Mr. Smith's poor relations, and is still distributed among them to the extent of £6.787 a year with the result of making it the interest of some hundreds of persons not to work and get on in life.

The final part was to be devoted to be ying impropriations for preachers, and its income is distributed among the poor clergy, though the resulting benefit is found to be more than counterblanced by the disappointment caused to the unsuccessful applicants, the trouble of the canvassing, and the perilous habit which it too offen inspires of begging with colorable tales of poverty. ed by that of Mr. Henry Smith, who in
